[Original: Spanish]
3 April 1969

In principle, the Convention could be ratified by the Argentine Government with the proviso that it would apply only to questions of a commercial nature, on condition that one of the parties is resident outside Argentine territory and that it is subject to reciprocity. Furthermore, since this is a matter pertaining to the process of law and since, under the Argentine federal system, competence in such matters is reserved to the provinces, before taking a final decision, the national Government must consult the provincial Governments.

GABON
